

Story Board

By Justin Rigby

Jim just got a new job and is balancing college with it, he stopped going to the gym because he has a hard time finding good times to go and starts to hate himself.

He wants to find the perfect time to work each muscle group, it seems everytime he goes to the gym people are using what he wants to use.

He downloads our app and looks for the times he has available and the times that are less busy. And starts to feel good about himself again.

He finishes out the semester, but realizes that with a new semester comes a new schedule. He seems to forgotten about the gem of the app he used last time. He seems even busier than before. He starts to slip back into his former self before the gym.

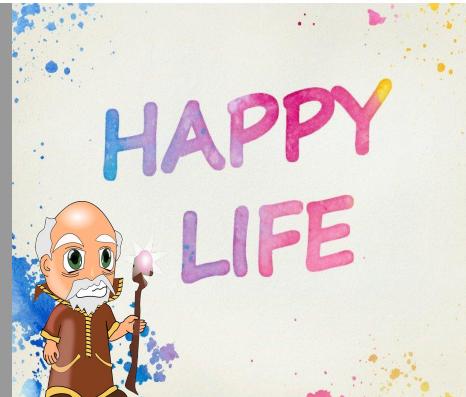

He re-downloads it and finds the new times that fit his needs. He then heads to the gym, but injures his arm and he hates leg days.

He looks to find the times the leg machines are used and finds they are rarely used because nobody likes legs. He starts going early in the morning to feel accomplished.

He has now found that hating himself was never an issue and it was his brain playing tricks on him, but he still loves going to the gym and finding the best times for him. He loves his new self and his new drive and continues to better himself to this day!

Sam kelly
storybook

Bob has just arrived to USC and has found himself overwhelmed by his classes

Bob wants to find the best time to work out, but when he finds time to go to the gym it always seems crowded and he can't utilize his time efficiently

Bob then talks to his room mates about his problem, to which they mention this app that tracks how crowded the gym is

Bob downloads the app and easily finds the best times to go to the gym that fit in his schedule

Joe Gatteem Storyboard

By: Jonah Andrews

Joe heads back to college to pursue a degree in engineering cause his art career never really took off. One day Joe is walking back to his dorm from his math class when he suddenly has a violent seizure.

Joe is quickly rushed to the nearest hospital where he is then told by the doctor that he must exercise or next time he won't make it.

The next day Joe heads back to school and after class he walks 30 minutes to the nearest gym. However, when he finally arrives he sees that the gym is so crowded that he is unable to actually work out.

Joe talks to his friend about this life or death issue. His friend promptly recommends this cool fitness app that allows the user to see when the gym is and isn't crowded.

The next day Joe checks out this new app and sees that the gym is only at half capacity right when he is through with lunch.

Joe quickly heads to the gym where he enjoys a very productive exercise. Since he utilized his time efficiently he is starting to feel better than ever.

50 years pass and Joe realizes that he has survived this long because of his handy dandy fitness app. Joe still goes to the gym and feels as if he will live forever. However, a distracted bus driver has other plans.

The Story of James

By: Zak Elguindi

This is James. He is a student who enjoys working out in his free time. As his schedule has gotten busier, he's struggling to find time to work out.

James goes to the gym one day and realizes how crowded it is. He grows angry and storms out of the gym in frustration.

shutterstock.com • 1832535016

James is brooding in his frustration when he runs into his friend; William, who then shows James his super cool app that tells William how many people are in the gym at once.

James is amazed at the brilliance of the app and decides to download it himself. While on the app, he noticed that the app said the gym wasn't crowded, so he decided to go. Sure enough, the gym was nearly empty!

James was so happy to be able to work out in peace again. He enjoys that the app tracks the data of the gym every week, so he can predict which times will be the least busiest.

2 years have passed, and James has now won gold at the bodybuilding olympic event. He credits all of his success to the amazing app his friend William introduced him to, as he was able to know the best time to work out, thus maximizing his potential.

